

FRENCH AMERICAN BUSINESS WEEK

WASHINGTON, D.C.

LANNY S. COHEN Capgemini Group, Chief Technology Officer

On May 3, the French American Business Week (FABW) will be delighted to host Lanny S. Cohen.

Lanny S. Cohen is the global chief technology officer of Capgemini. As head of the Group's global chief technology officer network, Cohen acts across all the Capgemini businesses to help integrate new technology trends, respond to client needs and is ultimately responsible for strengthening the relationship with partners on technology matters.

Cohen's career reflects a devotion to furthering the value of business technology and its impact on creating sustainable performance improvement and competitive advantage for today's enterprises. Leveraging a diversity of experiences serving clients across industry sectors and process domains, Cohen brings perspectives from his client serving, practice management, and innovation leadership roles.

With over a 30 year career at Capgemini in North America and its predecessor Ernst & Young, Cohen has held positions along the entire spectrum of delivery, management, and strategy in the industry from Consultant to partner/vice president to CEO and North American Country Board Chairman.

Lanny currently is a member with the Group Executive Committee, University Board and Intellectual Property & Solution Board of the company helping to shape the direction of our Innovation future for our clients and our company. He is responsible for the development of Capgemini's cloud go to market strategy, Cloud Choice, and he also developed the Groups innovation strategy, Applied Innovation, and is responsible for overseeing the Groups Applied Innovation Exchange Global Platform. He is also oversees the Groups Architects Community Program to ensure the availability and career progression opportunities for this critical competency and these professionals. Cohen speaks regularly on the subjects of high impact and successful business transformation globally.

Within and outside of Capgemini, Cohen is a strong advocate of higher education. His commitment to this field has earned him a position as the Chairman of the Board of Trustees and a member of the Center for Ethics and Social Responsibility of St. Thomas Aquinas College, a leading liberal arts institution in New York State. Mr. Cohen has also served on the boards for the Association of Management Consulting Firms (AMCF), the consulting industry's professional association, and TechAmerica, one of the largest technology trade associations in the United States.

Cohen was named one of Consulting Magazine's Top 25 Most Influential Consultants for 2004 for his work at Capgemini and his industry leadership through AMCF. In addition, in 2008, based on a record of helping clients meet global challenges and transform their businesses, he was honored by the Executive Council with the Judges Choice Award for CEO and Innovation of the Year.

He holds a B.A. with dual majors from Georgetown University and an M.B.A. from Southern Illinois University. A Certified Systems Professional, he is a graduate of the executive leadership programs at the Kellogg School at Northwestern University and Harvard University. He also holds an honorary doctorate degree with St. Thomas Aquinas College in Commercial Sciences.
